Project Manager/Estimator

Adam Bauchle grew up in Prior Lake, Minnesota. While in highschool, Bauchle worked as a landscaper/erosion control specialist during the summers where he enjoyed working outside and found a passion for working hard. After high school, he considered Construction Management programs at Minnesota State Mankato and UW- Stout. Minnesota State's location in Mankato and program reputation made it his first choice to further his education.

While at Minnesota State, Bauchle enjoyed his estimating classes instructed by Dr. Brain Wasserman. "Dr. Wasserman's real-world experiences are something that students should really pick up on as much as they can." he said. While the classroom was important, he adds, "I wish I would have been more active in CMSA and the competition teams...because while in school, that's the closest to real-world experience a student can get."

After graduation and completing his internship at the Institute for Environmental Assessment, Bauchle landed at Carciofini where he still is today. He is now a Project Manager and Estimator where he also oversees the fire-stopping division. He enjoys working for a subcontractor because of the amount and variety of jobs he is involved on. "I am looking at two to three jobs a day...which is nice because I don't get burnt out on one type of project."he said.

For current students, Bauchle wants to stress the importance of maintaining connections. "No matter how much schooling a construction manager gets, odds are everyone will run into something that they need some advice on. Having a former classmate to call who may know the answer is a special tool that some people may not have." he said.

Stong leaders like Adam are what give our program a great reputation in the industry, keep up the great work!
